

Conference

E. coli*: Cases, Controls and Common Sense

Royal Society for Public Health

Wednesday 13th May 2009, 28 Portland Place, London, W1B 1DE

Aims

Food safety remains a major consumer concern and the subject of much media attention. This is particularly true for cases caused by E. coli O157 which can lead to severe complications in vulnerable populations. The John Barr outbreak in Wishaw, Scotland resulted in 350 cases and 20 deaths, and more recently the largest outbreak ever seen in Wales affected more than 150 people and killed one child.

The RSPH conference will bring together experts from industry, the legal profession and government involved in the issues surrounding the prevention and consequences of E. coli O157 outbreaks, as well as its control and management.

Programme will include

Morning session Chaired by Professor Hugh Pennington, Emeritus Professor of Bacteriology, University of Aberdeen

E. coli* O157 – its epidemiology and microbiology

Dr Iain Gillespie (Senior Epidemiologist, HPA)

Management of E. coli O157 in fresh fruit and vegetable produce: How can we be safe?

Kaarin Goodburn MBE, Secretary General, Chilled Food Association.

The financial and other consequences of E. coli O157 outbreaks – a US perspective

William Marler, Managing Partner, Marler Clark LLP PS

Preventing E. coli outbreaks: the role of the Environmental Health Practitioner

Dr Lisa Ackerley, Managing Director, Hygiene Audit Systems

Findings from the South Wales E. coli O157 report

Professor Hugh Pennington, Emeritus Professor of Bacteriology, University of Aberdeen

The role of food safety culture in a case study of E. coli O157

Professor Chris Griffith, Head of Food Research and Consultancy Unit at the University of Wales Institute, Cardiff and Editor of the British Food Journal

The role of the Microbiologist in an E. coli outbreak

Dr Richard Meldrum, Head of Food, Water and Environmental Section, NPHS Microbiology, Wales

Expert round table discussion

Delegates will have an opportunity to put questions to a panel of speakers which will also include Frank Yiannas Vice President for Food Safety at Wal-Mart.

Who should attend?

This meeting will provide an excellent opportunity to update on the issues surrounding E. coli O157. It is essential learning for those working in food hygiene and safety, the retail industry, the meat industry, and anyone involved in the preparation of food. It will be particularly relevant for Environmental Health Practitioners, Epidemiologists, Food Safety Trainers and Food Manufacturers.

The speakers, who are acknowledged experts in their fields, include Professor Hugh Pennington who has chaired two of the most important enquiries into UK outbreaks. Professor Pennington will be speaking about his findings from the Public Inquiry into the South Wales outbreak. He will also Chair the morning session.

Other speakers include William Marler, the world's leading food safety compensation lawyer from the USA and national expert in food borne illness prevention. Cases he has handled include the now famous 'Jack in the Box' E. coli O157:H7 outbreak, resulting in a landmark $15.6 million settlement. William Marler will discuss the consequences that ripple out from a shiga-toxin producing E. coli outbreak, including the burdens of long-term health care on individuals and responsible parties; the legal, financial, and public relations repercussions on businesses; and the implications for public agencies, regulation, and legislation.

Our experts will examine key areas and issues along the food chain which have implications for the causes and management of E. coli O157 outbreaks.
